The Ru-Klux Klan-Mississippi

We will suppose that in Mississippi, lew days since, a gang of men repaired to one of her prominent jells, away from the county in which the prisoners had been indeted, and there, after committing great limates in the jail, had executed certain riseners within the latter's jurisdiction id control. What would have been bought of it? What would the Radical intensis in the North and West have said to the impoverishment of their own section. concerning it? Are there any terms too evere and violent which the could have hand to characterise it? Wou'd they not have insisted that such an act sufficiently fomonstrated, beyond all doubt, the unfitone of the people of the State in which the crime was committed to have any regular organized government of its own? Wen'd they not have insisted that it hould be condemned to a permanent teritoral organization? But it del not hapen in Mississippi. It did not happen in ony Southern States. It occurred in our with Austin Smith, a son of Extra Billy near neighbor-Indiana, with its Republican Administration, headed by Governor Baker, and its Federal Administration, headed by Senator Morton

The Legal-tender Law.

We have been skeptical in regard to the reports from Washington that the Supreme Court of the United States would declare the Legal-tender Act to be unconstitutional. The act has now been in force more than six years, and all the business of the country—all its previous indebtedness, as well its liabilities for in the future, have country—all its previous indebtedness, as well its liabilities far in the future, have been lased upon it. While it would not have been purprising if, immediately after lie passage, a case had been taken to the Supreme Court, and a decision rendered against its constitutionality, it would be assonishing for such a verdict to be given aw, after all that has transpired. The Court has not wanted opportunities to pass upon it, as there have been many cases adjusticated in the minor tribunals, which, almost without an exception, have declared in layer of its legality.

Its Chief justice. Mr. Chase, was the Secretary of the Treasury at the time the law was passed. In fact, it became a stante under his name and pressige. It would be somewhat remarkable if the Court over which "Old Greenbacks," presides should how declare the "greenback act" to be ancoustitutional.

Whatever may be this legal aspects of the

Whatever may be this legal aspects of the case, the Court would be credited with hir ile sincerity if it should now decide adverey to the constitutionality of the legal ten der act. It would be almost universally between that it was done to save the bond-tolder from the payment of their debt in greenbacks. But would such a decision, even if made, have that effect? It will be remembered that the bondholders lent greenbacks, and greenbacks only to the

If they are no money new, upon which a legal action could be brought, they nover were money. It follows, therefore, that the Government newer received soy money from the bondholders. Gan the Government mentally be held liable for a payment in money, for that indebtedness as which they neared no money? This query will be rendered practical, and will the put in a multitude of forms if the singurum Court should now actide the legal tender act to be unconstitutional.

Me see from a perusal of the bondholders organs in New York that it is believed by them that such a decision would be very allowing a stand mistake. Their eventual payment depends open the greenback door time, and upon a region adherence to the legal tender act to the mistake.
